

Insight School of California has received two special Certificates of Congressional Recognition, one from the office of U.S. Congressman John Campbell (R-CA, 48th District) and another from the office of U.S. Congresswoman Loretta Sanchez (D-CA, 47th District). The certificates were presented in recognition of the school's innovations in online education and its ongoing dedication to providing an important educational option for high school students from a wide array of situations in northern, central and southern California, including those in danger of dropping out of school.

"It is very gratifying to receive this recognition from the Congress as we all strive to improve the educational resources available to our children in these very challenging times," said Sheila Shiebler, Executive Director, Insight School of California. "The utilization of advanced learning technologies, implemented by an exemplary team of faculty and advisors, creates a unique environment where our students can focus their efforts toward achievement, confidence and fulfilling their potential."

Insight School of California operates two online high schools in the state. The schools offer a robust, full-time, tuition-free online public high school program that also includes clubs, field trips and other opportunities for social interaction. The Insight program is designed to provide individualized learning and personal attention, while building community among students and teachers, with an emphasis on preparing students for their future after high school.
